

The smartest man there ever was,
Knew what made the birdies cheap,
And why the bees would buzz.

A clever man, if one was ever,
Knew how to operate machines,
And how to pull the levers.

And so this man, so far so wise,
Knew what made the flowers bloom,
And why the doves would cry.

I wonder, if I asked him,
I wonder if he'd tell,
I wonder if he even knew
How I could make you well.
