

When I was in elementary school
I hated doing times tables by hand
Because we had calculators
Arithmetic was the machine's job

Then I got to high school
And I always used Wolfram|Alpha
Skipped puzzling through the problems
Algebra was the machine's job

And when I went off to college
I hated studying French
So I'd put it through Google Translate
Linguistics was the machine's job

Well I finally got a girlfriend
And bought her a vibrator off Amazon
So I could spend more time programming
Making love was the machine's job

I was busy and expressing myself is hard
So I trained a billion-parameter Transformer
To express myself for me
Poetry was the machine's job

Day by day I went farther, too far
And then suddenly it was far too late
Being human's the machine's job
And now I have to be the machine
